Part 3:

Topic: Homeschooling

📁 Homeschooling.mp3

M: Sarah, I heard your sister has recently started homeschooling her children. How's she finding it?

W: She says it's been challenging but rewarding. She's still adjusting to the new routine. But the children seem to enjoy learning at home much more than they did at school.

M: That sounds encouraging. I've always thought homeschooling gives parents much greater flexibility in deciding what their children learn.

W: It certainly does. Although, I imagine it also requires a great deal of planning and commitment.

M: Absolutely, in fact, I think parents who homeschool should design their own learning program instead of following a standard school curriculum too closely. Every child learns differently, so lessons should be tailored to their interests, strengths, and pace of learning rather than treating everyone the same.

W: I can understand why you'd say that. However, creating an entire program from scratch sounds overwhelming for many parents, especially if they don't have a teaching background.

M: That's true, but there are plenty of educational resources available nowadays. Parents can adapt existing materials rather than simply copying what schools already do.

W: Speaking of homeschooling, I've always wondered how families manage when they have several children studying at home together.

M: Surprisingly, my sister says it works quite well. The older children often help the younger ones, and group activities encourage cooperation instead of competition.

W: I've heard similar experiences from other homeschooling families. Although children may study different subjects, they often work together on projects or practical activities, which seems to create a supportive learning environment.

M: Exactly. It also teaches responsibility because older siblings naturally become role models for the younger ones. Even so, I still worry that children educated entirely at home might miss out on something equally important.

W: Schools provide opportunities to make friends, resolve disagreements, and interact with people from different backgrounds. Those everyday social experiences are difficult to recreate at home.

M: That's not an area of my expertise, though I suppose that's a reasonable concern. Many homeschooling families try to join sports clubs or community groups to compensate for that.

W: They certainly help, but occasional activities are quite different from spending every day with classmates. Regular interaction with peers is still an essential part of growing up. In my opinion.

M: Perhaps, although, looking ahead, I actually think homeschooling may become less common in the future, as schools continue introducing more personalized learning, smaller class sizes, and flexible teaching methods, parents may feel less need to educate their children at home.

W: That's an interesting prediction, if traditional schools continue improving. I can certainly see why more families might choose to return to the classroom.”

- Parents should create their own curriculum M
- Homeschooling multiple children at the same time is a good idea B
- Homeschooling deprives children from the important social interaction W
- Homeschooling will become less popular in the future M

PART 3

Topic: Environmental volunteer program

■ Environmental volunteer program.mp3

1. The media exaggerates the benefits of the program. B
2. Littering will always be a problem. M
3. The motivation of volunteers does not affect the outcome of the program. W
4. Punishment is the most effective way to prevent littering. M

Man: I watched a news report about the clean-up program yesterday. To be honest, I think the media made it sound much more successful than it really was.

Woman: I agree. They only showed the best parts and ignored many problems. The benefits of the program were clearly exaggerated.

Man: Exactly. And even with programs like this, I still think littering will always be a problem. Some people just do not care enough about public places.

Woman: Maybe, but I don't think we should give up. Volunteers can still make a difference.

Man: That's true, but the problem will never completely disappear.

Woman: For me, the reason why volunteers join is not very important. Whether they do it because they care about the environment or because they want experience, the result can still be the same if they work hard.

Man: I see your point. But I think we need stricter rules too. In my opinion, punishment is the most effective way to stop people from littering.

Woman: I'm not sure it is the best way. Education is also important.

Man: Education helps, but without fines or punishment, many people will not change their behavior.

Topic: Local Cultural Differences

Local Cultural Differences.mp3

1. Language is the main barrier to experiencing a local culture. M
2. Globalisation is having an impact on local cultures. B
3. Young people are less interested in their own local heritage. W
4. Travel is the best way to understand cultural differences. W

Man: Have you ever thought about how different local cultures can be, even within the same country?

Woman: Definitely. When I visited different regions last year, I was really surprised by how unique each place felt - the food, the festivals, the daily customs.

Man: For me, the hardest part is always the language. Even when people share a national language, local dialects and accents can create real misunderstandings. I honestly think language is the biggest barrier to experiencing a different local culture.

Woman: I would not say language alone is the biggest issue. There are other challenges too, like differences in values and social customs. But I am also concerned about how globalisation is affecting local cultures. International trends are slowly replacing traditional customs everywhere.

Man: I think you are right about that. Globalisation is clearly changing the way people live, and local traditions are not as strong as they used to be.

Woman: What worries me most is that younger people seem less motivated to learn about their own heritage. They are more interested in global trends than in local traditions.

Man: I am not completely sure about that. Some young people are actually very proud of where they come from and work hard to keep their traditions alive.

Woman: Maybe a few are. But in general, local knowledge is not being passed on the way it used to be. That is why I believe travel is really the most effective way to truly understand and appreciate cultural differences. You learn so much more by being there in person than by reading about it.

Man: Travel can certainly be eye-opening. But I think there are other good ways to learn too, such as online resources and cultural events.

Topic: Community design

Man: "You know, I believe building design can shape people's behaviors and interactions from the start. When spaces are designed well, people feel comfortable and naturally start connecting." Woman: "Of course, design matters, but there's no shortcut to building real community connections. Creating community takes time and consistency, even in spaces that encourage interaction."

Man: "Really? But I also feel that work communities and social communities aren't as different as we might think. Both require spaces that help people feel connected and valued, whether it's at work or in social settings."

Woman: "I'm not sure I agree with that. Work communities and social communities serve very different purposes. In a social community, people gather out of personal interest and shared hobbies, but in work communities, people connect because of their job roles. That can affect how close they feel and how they interact with one another."

Man: "I see your point, but even in work communities, people still find ways to connect on a personal level. A good work environment encourages friendships that might go beyond work topics."

Woman: "That's a good point. And with technology, people can now connect for both work and social reasons, even if they're not physically together. But I still think it's important to build spaces where people can gather in person."

Man: "Yes, I agree, but I think technology has really changed how communities form. It makes connecting so much easier, and people don't always need to meet face to-face to feel a sense of community."

Woman: "I see that, but I don't think online connections can fully replace in-person gatherings. There's a different energy when people come together in real spaces-something technology just can't replicate."

Man: "I understand, but I feel that virtual spaces can be just as meaningful. Technology adds a new layer, making it possible for communities to thrive even across distances, and that's valuable in its own way."

B. It is cheaper

"Shopping online has helped me save quite a bit of money. After a few months of online shopping, I was able to save enough to buy a new bicycle. But don't get me wrong, I haven't been eating any less or cutting back on the groceries I buy. It's just that online shopping allows me to compare prices and choose the store with the best deal."

C. It saves time

"I'm a pretty busy person, and I often don't have enough time because of my hectic work schedule. That's why I always shop online to save time. This way, I don't need to go to the store in person, and someone will deliver the items directly to me. Additionally, online shopping is very convenient because, with just a few clicks, I can buy everything I want without having to go from one store to another."

D. There are more choices

"I don't shop online because it's cheaper or because of the fast shipping. I shop online because, when browsing online stores, I have a wide range of choices. For the same item, there are many different types and brands for me to choose from and compare, which allows me to pick the one I like the most."

PROTECTING THE ENVIRONMENT

Part 2 PROTECTING THE ENVIRONMENT .mp3

A. Use less water

"I think a lot of people overemphasize protecting the environment by cutting down on personal vehicles, avoiding plastic bags, planting a lot of trees, and so on. But I personally believe we should focus on protecting the environment through small daily actions we often overlook. For example, turning off the water while brushing our teeth or washing our hands. If everyone saves a little water like that, it would add up to a huge amount saved globally."

B. Shopping online

"I usually shop online to reduce the need to drive to the supermarket, which produces harmful emissions for the environment. Additionally, I can avoid using plastic bags for groceries when shopping in person. By simply sitting at home and clicking a few buttons, I can buy everything I want without emitting harmful gases from a car."

C. No driving to work

"I used to drive to work for a long period, but then I realized that the excessive use of personal cars contributes significantly to environmental pollution. Therefore, I chose to ride a bicycle to work, which benefits both the environment and my health."

D. Use less electricity

"I'm not that into environmental protection and usually just do what's convenient for me. But my electric bill last month shocked me because it was so expensive, and I realized that I needed to save money. So from now on, I'll have to manage my electricity use more efficiently."

■ Part 2 ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEM .mp3

A. Give away used items

"I often don't have time to think about how to reuse my belongings or clothes, but I don't want to throw them away because that would be wasteful. So, I think a better way is to donate them to charity organizations or give them to others. Many people are in need of these things, and

B. Buy environmentally friendly products

"A good way to protect the environment is by not using plastic bags or by bringing reusable bags when going to the market, which helps reduce the disposal of plastic bags, a material that is difficult to decompose. However, I'm a very busy person and rarely have time to prepare my own bags when going shopping, and I usually drive to buy groceries quickly instead of walking. I guess I can't protect the environment by not driving. But I have a principle of only buying eco-friendly products, so I think I'm still contributing in a small way to protecting the Earth."

C. Reuse containers for storing food

"I see that too many people are wasting food containers, as they often throw them away after use, such as glass jars or plastic bottles. I can reuse them to store food and neatly organize them in my refrigerator. Reusing these containers is a very easy way to protect the environment that anyone can do."

D. Does not use commercial cleaning products

"I find the act of giving away old or secondhand items a bit hypocritical. Why do people give away their old things, only to go out and buy the same item but brand new? Not only does this fail to protect the environment, but it also causes double the harm. Personally, I have a way of protecting the environment by not releasing harmful chemicals into it. I do this by not purchasing chemical cleaning solutions. Instead, I make use of natural products like lemons to create my own floor-cleaning solutions."

DO EXERCISES 🎧 Part 2 DO EXERCISES.mp3

A. Help improve work performance

"I know that working out every day is good for my health and helps me get in shape. But what I've found is that exercising actually boosts my productivity a lot and really helps me focus better. So, I always try to squeeze in some exercise before heading to work—it definitely makes me more productive."

B. Find exercise tiring

"We've all heard about the many benefits of exercising, and I know about them too. My friends often invite me to work out, but after I exercise, I end up feeling extremely exhausted and spend the rest of the day just lying around to recover."

C. Has fun when exercising with friends

"I often go to the gym to work out, but what really motivates me to workout is catching up with my friends there, not just for improving my health. Plus, it's a great way to meet and make new friends. For me, exercising is just another chance to socialize."

D. Hate exercising

"My friends often advise me to exercise to maintain a good physique and health. However, I am very busy with a tight work schedule. Even if I weren't busy, I still wouldn't like to exercise. I feel uncomfortable as soon as I put on workout clothes. I don't think exercise is something that suits me."

A PLACE FOR STUDYING (Tr41)

■ Part 2 A PLACE FOR STUDYING .mp3

A. On public transport

"The distance from my house to school is 20 km, and it usually takes me an hour to get there. So, when I'm on the train, I use the time to do homework and review the lessons for the day. Some people say that studying like this can be distracting, but I find it very effective for me."

B. At home

"I don't like studying in very crowded places because I can't focus well. I usually sit on the sofa in the living room to study. My parents often travel for work, so my house is very quiet."

C. In the coffee shop

"I don't like studying in very quiet places such as at home or in the library because I get sleepy easily and might even fall asleep while studying. There's a coffee shop near my house, and I often go there to study because the presence of other people makes me feel more motivated. I find that I achieve higher productivity and efficiency in my studies when I'm there."

D: In the park

"I notice that most people prefer doing their homework in the classroom, but for me, those chairs are way too hard and leave me sore all day. I prefer sitting under the trees in the park to study—it's cool, and the air is fresh. There's a famous coffee shop across from where I sit, and they serve really good coffee."

Man: "You know, I believe building design can shape people's behaviors and interactions from the start. When spaces are designed well, people feel comfortable and naturally start connecting."

Woman: "Of course, design matters, but there's no shortcut to building real community connections. Creating community takes time and consistency, even in spaces that encourage interaction."

Man: "Really? But I also feel that work communities and social communities aren't as different as we might think. Both require spaces that help people feel connected and valued, whether it's at work or in social settings."

Woman: "I'm not sure I agree with that. Work communities and social communities serve very different purposes. In a social community, people gather out of personal interest and shared hobbies, but in work communities, people connect because of their job roles. That can affect how close they feel and how they interact with one another."

Man: "I see your point, but even in work communities, people still find ways to connect on a personal level. A good work environment encourages friendships that might go beyond work topics."

Woman: "That's a good point. And with technology, people can now connect for both work and social reasons, even if they're not physically together. But I still think it's important to build spaces where people can gather in person."

Man: "Yes, I agree, but I think technology has really changed how communities form. It makes connecting so much easier, and people don't always need to meet face-to-face to feel a sense of community."

Woman: "I see that, but I don't think online connections can fully replace in-person gatherings. There's a different energy when people come together in real spaces-something technology just can't replicate."

Man: "I understand, but I feel that virtual spaces can be just as meaningful. Technology adds a new layer, making it possible for communities to thrive even across distances, and that's valuable in its own way."

A. To relax

"I see a lot of people listen to music right when they wake up to help them feel alert. But if I listen to music as soon as I wake up, it gives me a headache all day and makes it hard for me to focus on anything. So, I just listen to music to relax when I'm feeling comfortable, not for any other reason."

B. While studying

"I have a habit of listening to music while studying; it helps me stay motivated and alert while doing my assignments. If I don't play music, I could fall asleep at any moment, and I'll study in a discouraged mood."

C. While singing

"My brothers and friends often say that I have a beautiful voice, so I often sing when I meet them. I usually play music on the TV and hold the remote control, pretending it's a microphone so I can sing."

D. After waking up

"I usually listen to a pop or rock song as soon as I get out of bed in the morning because it helps me wake up instantly. If I don't listen to music at that moment, I don't know when I'll be able to get up and go to work."

Man: I've been thinking about how children and young people use technology nowadays. They seem very interested in learning through computers, tablets, and educational apps.

Woman: I agree. Technology-based lessons can make learning more enjoyable, and many children are excited to use digital tools in class.

Man: However, I think technology can also affect their communication skills. Some children spend so much time online that they find it difficult to communicate with people face to face.

Woman: Yes, I've noticed that too. They may feel confident when sending messages, but they sometimes struggle to have conversations without using a device.

Man: Another problem is that many families don't know how to manage their children's use of technology. I think parents need more support and guidance to set appropriate rules at home.

Woman: That may be true, but I also believe children can learn to control their own online behaviour. With proper education, they can understand when to stop using technology and how to interact responsibly online.

Topic: New museum in town ■ Topic New museum in town.mp3

Person A: Finished the visit quickly

“I was quite excited to see the new museum in town, but when I arrived, I found it smaller than I expected. There were only a few rooms open to visitors, and some exhibitions were still being prepared. I walked through the main displays, took a few photos, and left after about thirty minutes. I thought the museum was interesting, but there was not enough to keep me there for a long time.”

Person B: Got lost during the visit

“I liked the idea of having a new museum in our town, but my visit was a little frustrating. The building was quite large, and the signs were not very clear. I tried to find the history section, but I ended up walking around the same area several times. In the end, I had to ask a staff member for help because I could not find the correct room.”

Person C: Enjoyed the use of technology

“For me, the best thing about the new museum was the modern technology. Instead of just reading information on the walls, visitors could use touch screens, audio guides, and even virtual reality to learn about the exhibits. This made the visit much more interesting and enjoyable, especially for young people.”

Person D: Wants to visit again

“I had a really good time at the new museum, although I could not see everything in one visit. Some parts were very crowded, and I missed one special exhibition because I arrived too late. I think the museum has a lot to offer, so I would definitely like to go back another day and spend more time there.”

Man: "Have you heard about the new local center opening next week? I think it will be a great place for exhibitions. But you know, I believe exhibitions should be different. They need to show new ideas, not just the same old things."

Woman: "I agree that exhibitions should be interesting, but I'm not sure they need to be completely different. Sometimes, it's nice to celebrate our traditions, even if they are losing significance."

Man: "Yes, that's true. But if we keep doing the same things, we might forget why those traditions are important. The more we change things, the more people will remember them!"

Woman: "I see your point. However, I worry the local festivals will disappear soon. If people don't care about them, they might stop celebrating altogether."

Man: "That's a good point, but I think we can make the festivals more exciting to attract people. We should include activities that everyone can enjoy, not just the same old customs."

Woman: "I understand that. But let's not forget how important schools are in keeping our traditions alive. They teach children about our culture and values. If schools don't focus on traditions, who will?"

Man: "That's true! Schools play a big role. But maybe parents should be the ones in charge of this. Keeping traditions is everyone's responsibility, not just schools or the education system."
